SESSION A : The Essence of Pharmacy Technicians' Practice: Professionalism and Ethics Unwrapped

*Dr. Patricia Gerber B.Sc. (Pharm), ACPR, Pharm.D., FCSHP, Associate Professor /
Director, Doctor of Pharmacy (Graduate) Program, Faculty of Pharmaceutical Sciences / The University of British Columbia*

In recent years the pharmacy technician profession has undergone significant changes in regulation and scope of practice. In this presentation Dr. Gerber will describe how professionalism and ethics are the foundation of competent practice. Through examples she will bring awareness to the importance of professional identity in today's practice and tomorrow's professionals. By the end of the session and upon reflection, participants will be able to:

- ◆ Distinguish between professionalism and ethics and describe how they impact behaviour, attitude, and judgement.
- ◆ List expectations for ethical practice by pharmacy technician
- ◆ Review the predominant ethical theories that support contemporary ethical practice.
- ◆ Discuss best practices related to social media use
- ◆ Outline how professionalism and the socialization process inform the development of a professional identity.
- ◆ Outline the role of the hidden curriculum and of role models in shaping evolving identities.

SESSION E: Session E Inter-Professional Collaboration between Pharmacists and Registered Pharmacy Technicians

Jamie Yuen BSc (Pharm), RPh, BCGP, Patient Care Practitioner, Lecturer, Faculty of Pharmaceutical Sciences / Pharmacists Clinic, The University of British Columbia / Vancouver Campus

Pharmacists and Registered Pharmacy Technicians in both the community and hospital setting both contribute to patient care. Inter-professional collaboration between the two professions is critical to optimize opportunities to provide quality care. This session will review the pharmacist and registered pharmacy technician thought processes and roles and identify areas for inter-professional collaboration.

Eric Sveinson Sletmoen, R.Ph.T., HEU Shop Steward (VGH Local)

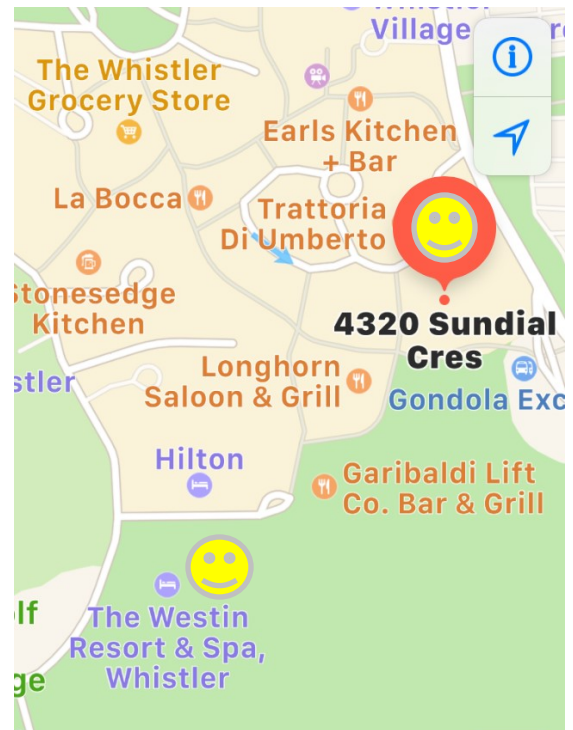

Eric became passionate about pharmacy after years working towards a career in theatre, realizing that medicines and health is a unifying factor for people - something we all have in common. He is especially passionate about the role of pharmacy in treating mental health issues, and the impact pharmaceutical care has on these patients. One of the best things about working in a professional acute healthcare environment is the constant exposure to new information and the ability to learn from other colleagues and healthcare professions, from pharmacy to nursing. At this year's conference, Eric hopes his passion for interprofessional teamwork and learning will rub off on the rest of you.

SESSION I: Cultural Sensitivity for Technicians in Dealing with First Nation People

*Jason Min BSc(Pharm), RPh, Lecturer, Pharmacist, Interprofessional Education Co-Lead
Faculty of Pharmaceutical Sciences / Pharmacists Clinic, The University of British Columbia / Vancouver Campus*

Despite ongoing efforts, health disparities between Indigenous and non-Indigenous populations persist. In this interactive and dynamic session, we will challenge participants to reflect on their own personal biases to acknowledge the importance of integrating cultural safety and humility in today's pharmacy practice. We will explore topics such as appropriate terminology, identity, historical context, and Indigenous perspectives on health and wellbeing. The presenter will also share their experiences and motivations for collaborating with Indigenous communities in the provision of culturally-safe pharmacy services.
